Not only do dynamic signs dictate the volume (loudness or softness), but also the change in volume over time (gradually louder or gradually softer). For instance, the volume could change slowly or abruptly, and at different rates. Dynamic signs can be found on music sheets for any instruments. Instruments as different as the cello, piano, french horn and xylophone can all play notes at different volumes and thus be subject to dynamic signs. There is no record confirming who the first composer to use or invent dynamic signs was, but Giovanni Gabrieli was one of the early users of the musical notations. Gabrieli was a Venetian composer during the Renaissance and the early stages of the Baroque era. During the Romantic period, composers started using dynamic signs more and increased its variety. The table below lists the commonly used dynamic signs.
